Everyone,

I'm posting a real-life scenario that happened to me in hopes that some of you can define it.

Last fall I was driving down the interstate on my way to work about 0630. I was following an empty, smallish, low-sided dump truck. I began to daydream, or my mind wandered, whatever. The visual of the truck took on a wavy image of a bigger dump truck and it was hauling large rocks, say the size of a five pound bag of flour. My family owned a gravel pit and these rocks are called "dornicks" (term not found in my Webster's). Anyway, following a truck hauling rocks is known to be dangerous as they can and do fall off the load, come through your windshield and kill you.

So in my daydream a good friend of mine is driving, I'm in the front passenger seat. We're both worrywarts. I'm asking him to move into the left lane and explained the family history and my knowledge of dornicks. He's giving me a hard time about worrying too much – the dialogue is maybe about 3 or 4 exchanges back and forth. The daydream ends as I arrive at the off ramp on the interstate.

The next day at work I do something I very, very rarely do. I access a computer because there are tornados in the area. The second time I check the weather I notice running along side some headlines. One reads: LARGE ROCK FALLS OFF TRUCK ON I -- 75 AT 3 AM, BLOCKS TRAFFIC SEVERAL HOURS.

Okaaaaay. I printed that and still have it. My personal timeline on what I used to call premonitions runs about 18 hours so this one is a little long – 0630 premonition to event 0300.

Can somebody answer these and / or throw in whatever else strikes
